

7 axes, 6 rotated per node

The label is the point. Three unlabelled variants cost three times as much to review as one; three named directions cost a decision. The other three candidates are kept — the evaluation measures diversity over the whole set, and the preference layer needs them as the negative side of a pair.